THINK About It

Love Like It's Your Last

By Uperesa Fakava

I am writing this from personal experience, and it has been sad.

Earlier this month a loved one of mine passed away, but it wasn't the peaceful kind of passing. I tried to keep them alive.

I woke up and watched television all day. I never cared for this loved one, nor asked how they were doing. It was not until three hours later that I entered their room and noticed them breathing heavily, gasping for air. They claimed to have been breathing like that for hours, this was before the sun came up. After calling the ambulance, I sat with them for thirty minutes till they passed. Time passed, eventually the day came, and still no sign of the ambulance.

The moral of the story is to spend more time with loved ones.

I have faced the idea of bearing the death of loved ones. I mourn the loss of those who have passed, even without knowing who they are.

My all-time message for people is to spend more time with those you care about and those who care about you, family members for instance. For you see, one of the many famous quotes circulating in culture is, "You only get one Mother." It goes without saying you only get one family truly rendered to you by nature. Other people, like friends, are just the result of social bonding, and friends can be replaced.

Time spent with family is worth every Second

One could also say that to not grieving, even while the person is still alive, is hard. That would be like halting all communication with a loved one. I would say, "Wouldn't that be awful? Not to spend time loving one another?" Ah, I would be wrong to say one need not grieve. One thing is for certain, one must always spend time with loved ones and love them dearly. Listen to them, and cherish time. Memories will last, and so should their names in our hearts.

Go now, and tend to the needs of your loved ones. Love life, and create and cherish moments, for tomorrow is never promised.

Take the time to think about it.

Fifty Shades of Grey
Review by: Dolan Grey
Fresh Print Staff

From the perspective of someone who has read the book Fifty Shades of Grey, I would like to say that I am unbelievably satiated with what I read. The book solely revolves around the two characters, the plain yet desirable Anastasia Steele and her romantic beau Christian Grey.

Well for those of you that want a gist of the plot, it is about a young lady who foolishly falls into a strictly professional relationship with a rich and young man with a dark past who has a body to die for and that can cause any woman (in some cases, any man) to squirm with fiery loins full of lust. The relationship exist only quench the needs of the domineering of Mr. Grey.

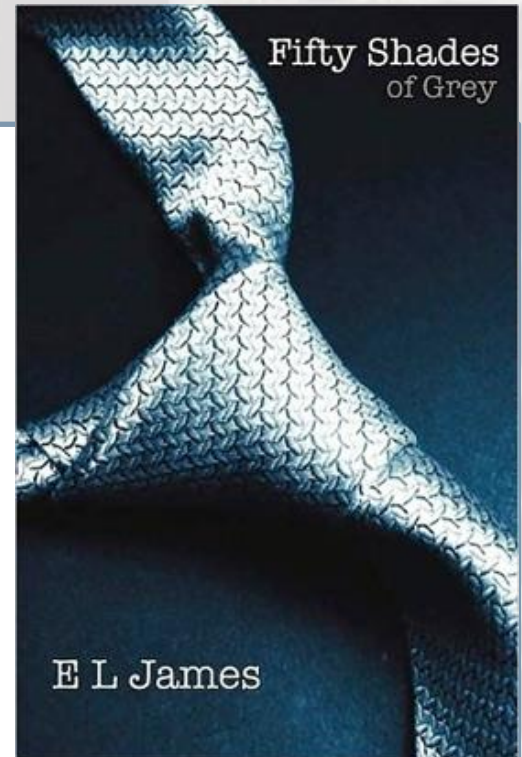

The story is told from Anastasia Steele's perspective. Despite her rebellious attitude against submission, she willingly falls hopelessly in love. She needs a constant reminder to remain professional but she still fails miserably.

For those of you who have not seen the trailers, the movie strongly portrays the enhanced sex appeal of the characters, especially of one Mr. Grey.

This twisted love story oozes the sex appeal in the book by highlighting the indulgent and curious measures taken by the pair. But in reality, do people really go to such extensive measures for love and sex?

For single people, the movie has a midnight premiere in theaters on February 14 so stay excited and ready for your Valentine, Christian Grey.

Fun fact for those who have read the books: the book is based on another popular series. And if you compare the respective plots, you will see that the Fifty Shades Trilogy is closely similar to the Twilight saga, as the author E. L. James has stated once in an interview. The main difference is that the 50 Shades Trilogy explores mores mature themes. It is all just mind blowing.

Pitch Perfect 2
Review by: Ellie Dallas
Fresh Print Staff

With the first Pitch Perfect hitting the right key to spark the interest of many viewers, a sequel to the movie has been made for the fans of the epic acapella voices of the Barden Bellas. After the first movie, the songs began to be overplayed. It just got annoying because suddenly everybody wanted to learn how to play the cup song... With a cup, and not an instrument.

Finally they decided to release bits and pieces of Pitch Perfect 2, which will be released on May 15, 2015. The big shock of the movie is that the fictional singing group Pentatonix will be played by real life Greenbay Packers (David Bakhtiari, T.J. Lang, Josh Sitton and Don Barclay and Clay Matthews), who made an appearance in the Pitch Perfect 2 trailer launched just before Katy Perry's halftime show during the Super Bowl XLIX. The Packers may not have made it to the Super Bowl this year, but they sure landed themselves on one heck of a pitch. "Bootylicious," isn't it? As Rebel Wilson said, "I'd like to be the ham in the man sandwich!" Very well then, get in line!

By the looks of the preview, Pitch Perfect 2 looks like it's going to be another hit, using a popular mix of songs from this era and favorite oldies. I just can't wait for the return of Fat Amy and the rest of the gang.

The Wish of the Dying Man

A poem by Uperesa Fakava.

Every dying man has a wish.

It's not a wish to be alive but a wish of love.

To be loved in this world means to have a worthy opportunity to live thyself; if not love, then the reason for the life in one was cursed upon them, leaving a broken spirit to rot in poverty of worship. But the dying man hath wished he had companionship; for that would be the better of gifts any god or gods could bless one with, whether the soul believes it or not. If with love and cohort, the dying man would be remembered until his last token hath taken out its cost. If the dying man has love and has lived a meaningful life, he is blessed to court death in the eye and live among it as if he was meant to live six feet under, for the man dying is just a man securing a ticket to the pouted highway.

Nevertheless, a man who has lived nothing, or has not received a blessing from the purported gods of creations, has not been too sincere in living. Although he may have lived a life, but he has not loved or confide trust into someone, this man, the one deprived of love, will not be gritted by tongue and teeth, but gnashed by an apostolic choir rescuing themselves from everyday life. This man would be anxious of death for his reason of living was to ensure more eaters in society, another soul trapped to fight to live.

The dying man has not but one wish; that is: relieve him of all duties on earth, loved or alone.

My Mother

By Vaipunaole Alofa

When I'm asked what I remember most about my mother, I always find that my answer stays the same. She cared about people from the bottom of her heart and always put others first. Her selflessness was at the core of who she was. She was the kindest person I've ever met, with a genuine concern and regard for the well being of others.

As time passed after my mother's death, I realized the best way to honor her life was to live my life the way my mother had raised me. My mother taught me to live in search of what's true, to make others feel good about themselves, to be silly or serious when appropriate, to smile as much as possible, and to have a clean conscience. I have to live my own life to its fullest, even if she is no longer in this world.

My mother was a part of every aspect of my life, and she was the person I most revered in this world. I miss her every day, but know she is with me in everything that I do.

Campus Talk

After almost five years, ASCC is now going to have a musical production again. Siuila Uele, Fresh Print Staff, went out to find what students thoughts are on the play, if they auditioned or not, and what are they expecting from it.

“I thought it was really interesting for people down here to try out and stuff. No, I didn't audition. It's just not my cup of tea. I think the play has a lot of potential though. There's definitely a lot of talent so I expect a good outcome; especially because Mau (Brown) is in it.”
Tyler Kruse

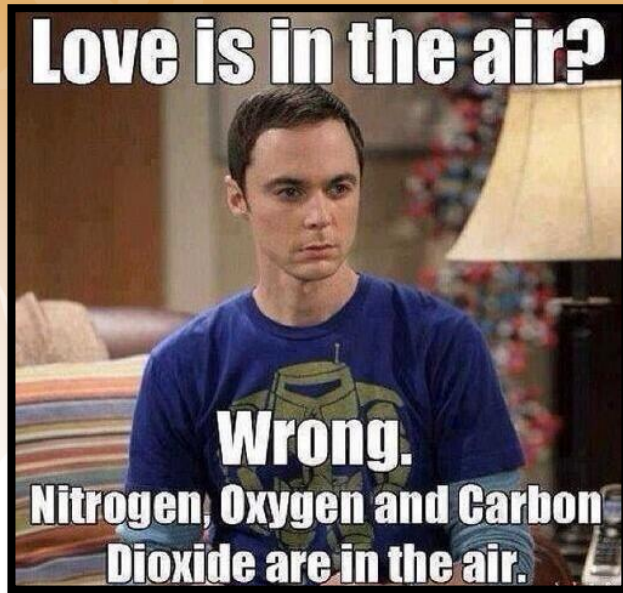

“I honestly didn't know what the whole play was about. No, I didn't audition because I don't like doing plays and stuff. I'm not exactly sure what to expect. With Mau in it, I expect a good performance.” George Young

“I thought it was alright. I don't really do this kind of stuff, so I didn't audition. I expect the play to be doing a lot better now that people are actually working on it, but I honestly don't care about what happens in the end though.” Reina Sotto

“I found the play really interesting. Yes, I auditioned and it was not fun. I had to sing and recite a little piece; it was terrible and uncomfortable. The auditions aren't for any specific characters; you just audition to get a slot in the play. Anyway, I auditioned because it was different and out of the ordinary compared to what else is going on at the college. I'm really not expecting much from this play though.” Lei Tago

“I was not interested at all because I'm not really into theatrical stuff. No, I didn't audition. To be honest, I don't think the play is going to turn out very well. I know people who are in it and I am not sure about how they'll do because they're kind of awkward.” Jonah Choi

Word of the day:

Ruminate v. Think deeply about something. “We sat ruminating on the nature of existence.”

Quote of the day... Valentines edition.

“Don’t brood. Get on with living and loving. You don’t have forever.”
